

Abstract

Subject of the thesis: The participation of Russia in international labour migration processes

Academic Adviser: Romanko L.V. Assistant Professor, PhD, Economy Science

Author: Chupanov M. A.

Organization: School of International Relations, Chair of International Relations, Political Science and World Economy, Pyatigorsk State University.

Relevance of the research topic. International labour migration has become an integral part of the world economy and a factor in the development of the international labour market. Today, Russia is both one of the world's largest centers of labor migrants' inflow and a supplier of labor force to the markets of other countries. Thus, these facts and the need to study the processes of labor migration with the participation of the Russian Federation, the definition of the driving forces and features of these processes, as well as their impact on the economy determine the choice of the research topic, as well as its relevance from scientific and practical positions.

The purpose of the research: based on the analysis of the current state of labor migration in the Russian Federation to identify the main problems and identify ways to smooth the negative consequences of the migration process.

Research Objectives:

- to study the concept, nature and types of international labour migration, its causes and consequences ;
- to identify current trends in the development of migration processes in the world economy;
- to study the dynamics and structure of international labour migration in Russia;
- to determine the main directions of improvement of migration policy in the Russian Federation.

The scientific novelty of the research is consists in conducting a comprehensive study of the phenomenon of international labour migration, identification of the prospects for the development of international migration flows in the Russian Federation, as well as working out the recommendations aimed at reducing the negative impact of migration processes on the Russian economy.

The structure of the work consists of introduction, two chapters, which include four paragraphs each, a conclusion, a 77-reference bibliography (6 of them are in foreign languages) and an attachment. The total volume is 63 pages.

Summary

Russia, as the largest world power, also implements migration policy based on the indicators of the country's migration processes.

Currently, Russia is a recipient of migrants. The Russian Federation holds the second place in the world after the US in this indicator. This number of migrants is explained not only by the fact that Russia is the center of various migration processes, but also by the peculiarities of the country's leadership policy, which is the reason why a large number of temporary migrant workers stay there. Sources of Russian migrants are not only the CIS countries, but also countries such as Turkey, China, Vietnam.

The key to sustainable development of the country's competitive potential, as well as the transition of the economic system to a qualitative level is migration management. The basis for the implementation of the legal migration policy is the administrative policy of the state, which is currently at the stage of reform.